Can I use a box instead of a suitcase?

The only thing that airlines care most about when you want to check your box is if it is within the allowed weight and size. A box can be used instead of a suitcase because it will take all your items, but before doing so please make sure you review your airline baggage allowance rules.

Can I check a box instead of a suitcase?

So you can check a box instead of a suitcase if it's within the above luggage dimensions. But if your box is bigger, overweight or oversized baggage charges will apply. How To Fly With a Cardboard Box? You are allowed to check the Cardboard Box even if it is not within the allowed weight/size of your airline.

Should you pack in a box or a suitcase?

For example, you can often pack sports equipment, hobby tools, or art supplies more easily and safely in a box than in a traditional suitcase. Cardboard boxes are like the unsung heroes of travel. They're cheaper than buying a new suitcase, and if you only use them once, they save you the expense of new luggage.

Does U-Haul have a luggage box?

U-Haul has a cardboard luggage box with a handle, as does UPS. Or consider using a sturdy plastic box instead. Place an extra piece of cardboard on the bottom of the box and on top of the contents. This not only provides additional strength, but keeps your items away from the knife when opening the box.

Should you wrap a box or a suitcase?

Traditional suitcases waste space for wheels, handles, zippers, and pockets that a box will not have. If the box gets damaged in transit, you won't care as much (unlike if they ruin an expensive piece of luggage that may have sentimental value to you). You can wrap the entire box in plastic wrap for added protection.
